Boise, Idaho — Idaho Mayors Sponsoring Idaho Transit Summit “At the Crossroads – Transit Alternatives for Idaho”

Every region of Idaho faces unique transit needs as it looks at its transportation challenges. In an effort to keep public transit prominently placed on the public agenda and to provide additional discussion about what is possible for Idaho, mayors across the state are convening this public policy forum on transportation issues in Idaho. The Idaho Transit Summit will be held October 16, 2007 from 7:30 a.m. - 12:30 p.m. at Boise State University in the Jordan Ballroom D.

“Mayors from all over Idaho realize transportation planning is a critical component for livable communities and economic development, and it is an issue facing all parts of our state,” said Boise Mayor David Bieter. The goals of the Idaho Transit Summit are to learn from the challenges and successes of Idaho’s neighbors, Utah and Oregon, to understand the challenges facing Idaho’s various regions and to discuss what financing options are available that would have broad-based support throughout the state.

The forum will bring together local government officials, legislators, business leaders and others. The half-day event will include two keynote addresses from public transit leaders from Utah and Oregon, states that have successfully developed alternative transportation options. A panel discussion with statewide leaders will follow regarding what is needed and what is possible in Idaho. There will be time following each for audience participation and response. The event is free and open to the general public.
